

PROJECTS JSA

 Regional Advisory

STRIKING A NEW DEAL

Finding a better way to develop renewables in Australian regions

Today

Social license and independent support for communities hosting renewable projects

- Briefing – Striking a New Deal Project
- Key issues and potential solutions
- Your views

About ProjectsJSA

Advice for government and industry on issues in regional Australia

Policy, strategy and issue analysis

Facilitation and community engagement

About the project

Striking a New Deal is

- working with community leaders in renewables regions across Australia
- resourcing local leadership and agreement making with government and industry
- supporting progress in the energy transition.

A collaboration between:

The Problem

Three challenges we see:

1. Communities accepting new renewable energy projects is essential to the energy transition.
2. Conventional government and industry engagement approaches are not the solution.
3. A small group of local leaders with very few resources are trying to fix the problem for their community.

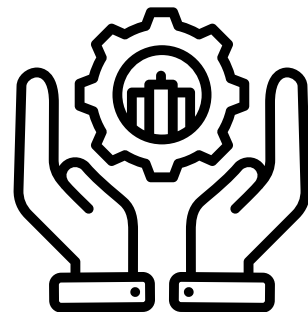

Project Components

Regional Leaders Network

Piloting Community Support

Working with Government and Industry

The way forward

We need to independently resource local government and community leaders to negotiate for community benefits

Four priorities:

1. Understanding whats going on
2. Contributing effectively on behalf of the community
3. Negotiating deals with multiple companies and agencies
4. Managing community division

Your thoughts

Community and local government experience - does this story and the project resonate?

Industry views and experience - what is working and what would make these issues easier to resolve?

Other views?

